There are two small dark spots, possibly holes or ink marks, visible on the left and right sides of the text block. The script is consistent with the one on the top half of the page.

Handwritten Burmese script on a palm leaf manuscript. The text is arranged in approximately 10 horizontal lines. The script is a traditional form of Burmese, likely from the 18th or 19th century. The leaf shows signs of age, including discoloration and some wear along the edges. There are two small circular holes visible, which were traditionally used for threading a cord to bind multiple leaves together into a book format.

Handwritten Burmese script on a second palm leaf manuscript. This leaf also contains approximately 10 lines of text in the same traditional script. Like the first leaf, it shows signs of age and wear. The two circular holes for binding are also present in the same relative positions. The text appears to be a continuation of the narrative or document found on the first leaf.

Handwritten text in Burmese script, likely a historical document or manuscript. The text is written in a cursive style and covers the upper portion of the page.
